

Community Attitudes to Financial Abuse.

Almost 40%

of the adult population have experienced or know someone who has experienced financial abuse.

26% admit they have experienced some form of financial abuse.

And a further 12% who have not experienced it themselves but state they know someone who has experienced or is experiencing financial abuse.

Nearly one in ten (9%) Australians,

the equivalent of nearly

1.8 million people,

admit to having been a perpetrator.

The research also revealed nearly four in five Australians agree that financial abuse is a widespread problem in Australia.

Of those who have experienced financial abuse, the most common financially abusive behaviours experienced include:

a perpetrator who uses all their partners wages for household expenses, while spending their own money only on themselves.

a perpetrator who hides assets.

a perpetrator who takes complete control of their partner's finances.

a perpetrator who refuses to contribute financially to their household.

In comparison to physical and verbal abuse, which are well documented and commonly known forms of violence, the poll identified a severe lack of understanding of financial abuse.

Of Australian adults could not recall the support available.

The overwhelming majority believe there are barriers in seeking support.

Of those who have experienced financial abuse, sadly only half have sought help.
