Shadé [00:00:03] Welcome to Leading Women, where together we're shifting business leadership from aspirational to actionable. I'm Shadé Zahrai, your host, well, more of your intrepid guide as we reach beyond business as usual to unearth the human stories and rich, relatable experiences of women leading business across the country.

Louise Adams [00:00:23] And so that was probably my "what next" moment. I thought to myself, I've got enough experience and I've got enough connections and networks and reputation that I could probably start to rather than just taking in the opportunities as they come to me, start to design opportunities and create opportunities for myself in areas that I wanted them to be.

Shadé [00:00:43] We know that diversity in leadership doesn't just make sense, it strengthens overall business performance, and it drives economic growth.

Caitlin Figueiredo [00:00:51] Every single young woman everywhere has the opportunity to be the next one and the next one and the next one.

Shadé [00:00:59] So whether you're an established or emerging leader, this podcast is for you. It's where you'll learn practical tips and actionable frameworks and hear stories of smart risk taking.

Julie Drago [00:01:10] The most important thing you can do in any business is to get involved with your industry body, figure out where your voice can be the most benefit and where you can make the most change.
